After a long waiting time, one good news for the streaming users is out now. The most awaited feature of Chromecast support for Amazon Prime Videos and YouTube application for Fire TV will be available in the coming months.

It was one of the most demanded features that Amazon Prime Video's support for Chromecast, but it wasn't a reality until now. Because of the business war, both companies didn't provide support for other devices.

As we all know, Chromecast is a Google product and Fire TV is an Amazon Product. Looking into the service, YouTube is from Google and Prime Videos is from Amazon, hence both companies were not providing supporting apps on other devices. Even Though both Fire TV and Chromecast are popularly used as the streaming device, each of them has its own features and specialty.
